New Herbicide for Oats Growers

Paradigm™ Herbicide with Arylex™ active was launched last year by DOW Agrosiences with exceptional results across geographies and crops. The original label allows for its use in wheat, barley, triticale and oats for grazing and hay only. This restriction of use in grain oats stemmed from overseas use generated with high use rates and application timings that occasionally caused slight crop injury. Extensive commercial use in forage oats crops across Australia last year and with additional internal and independent research local trials in oats taken through to grain yield has led to the decision to lift this restriction.

An independent study by the Department of Agriculture and Food WA in 2015 concluded that all of the new oat varieties tested (Bannister, Carolup, Kojanup, WAOAT2Q302-9 and Williams) tolerated Paradigm well with a good crop safety margin with regard to both hay yield and grain yield. Paradigm was tested at both the label rate and double the label rate to ensure any spraying overlaps caused when starting and stopping were also within the crop safety margin. It should be noted that this particular study used a mix of Paradigm + MCPA LVE 600 + Lontrel™ Advanced, which is a recommended mix when controlling large capeweed. The addition of Lontrel Advanced cannot be used for oaten hay destined for an export market; ensuring early control of capeweed with Paradigm + MCPA LVE 600 is preferable if the oats are being grown for export markets.

Paradigm has a fit to control troublesome weeds in most of the key oat growing areas. Northern cropping and grazing zones on the east coast have found Paradigm to be a valuable tool in controlling Mexican poppies, thistles and marshmallow. While in the south and west growers have seen great results on managing marshmallow, brassica weeds and many other localised weeds. Growers also enjoy the flexibility that Paradigm offers with short grazing withholding periods allowing stock to get back onto the paddock after 2 weeks.

Key benefits of Paradigm include:

- Excellent selectivity on all winter cereals
- Broad spectrum weed control
- Wide use window (3-leaf to full flag leaf emergence)
- Single application rate
- Easy tank mixing and good compatibility
- Excellent rotational flexibility due to rapid dissipation in soil
- Easy tank cleaning
